ONLY A RIVER WHITEFISH.

Story of Man Who Knew Fish When He Saw Them, Also a Railroad "Ad."

William C. Harris, angling editor of Outing, and rightly called the Izaak Walton of America, is a man who can come pretty near to telling exactly what fish you will find in Blank brook, in Blank township of Blank county, Idaho, Texas or Rhode Island. New fishes and new facts about them, he loves as a miser loves gold, only he does not hoard them, but gathers them to give out again.

One day Harris chanced to be in St. Paul. He was talking with General Passenger Agent Charley Fee, who said Harris should go to Montana to catch grayling in a stream at that time much advertised.

Harris said there were no grayling in the stream. The railroad man laughed at him as a New Yorker who pretended to know more about a certain Montana river than a man who had fished it.

The dispute waxed warm. Harris was due in New York on a certain day, and by taking the first train west he could have six hours on the stream and still keep his engagement. In 36 hours he was on the stream with a local representative of the railroad. He waded in, made one cast, and was fast to a silvery thing that tore about mightily like that of a grayling. It came to the net, and the local representative of the railroad fairly shouted:

"There, there; it's a grayling!"

"Pack this carefully in moss," said Harris. "Send it to your general passenger agent." Then he walked to the telegraph office and wired that official:

"Am sending one of your grayling. It's an infernal old river whitefish."

Then he took the train for New York and kept his engagement.

A MAN AND HIS SHOES.

The Thicker the Soles He Wears the Larger the City from Which He Hails.

"You can almost tell from what country a man comes by the weight of his shoes," said J. W. Davy, of Chicago, who represents a shoe company, to a Milwaukee Sentinel reporter. "You might not believe it," he continued, "but the thicker the soles of his shoes the larger the city from which he comes. In New York it is almost a fact, and the soles of the shoes there are exceedingly heavy. They are almost as heavy in Chicago. Men there wear shoes to protect their feet. They have not time enough, it seems, to bother with rubbers. So they make one pair of shoes do the work for all kinds of weather. Here in Milwaukee and in other cities of this size, I notice, the men wear light shoes and rubbers. I suppose they have time enough to wear the overshoes. Up in the country I find that in many places leather boots are not worn at all for several of the winter months. They wear heavy socks and then put rubber overshoes over these."

German "Sunday Schools." In England the term "Sunday school" has a definite meaning, and is exclusively used to denote a place of religious teaching. In Germany, however, the race for commercial supremacy has led to the establishment of Sunday schools at which mechanics are given practical instruction in their trades. There is, for example, a school for masons, at which the students, many of them mechanics who work during the week, spend several hours on Sunday morning in learning the higher branches of their craft. Similarly there are Sunday schools for tailors, ironmongers, bookbinders, and followers of other trades—even barbers and blacksmiths.

ORIENTAL PEWTER WORK.

Quite an Art Among the Chinese and Japanese—Highly Appreciated by Amateurs.

There is no question, says the Boston Herald, but that antique pewter from China and Japan is being hailed by collectors as a discovery. True, the compound is in itself nothing so novel. Indeed, our grandmothers used occasionally to get bits of it in the days of the East India trade, when husbands, sons and sweethearts would scurry about the Chinese ports in search of souvenirs to carry home to the "women folks." But somehow, in the midst of the general furore over Japanese art that has prevailed these last few years, very little has ever been heard of pewter objects, though some amateurs have been aware that it has claims to their consideration.

The exhibition of Chinese and Japanese pewter which Paul Chalfin, curator of the oriental department at the Museum of Fine Arts, is now arranging in cases in the metal room, is, so far as known, the first of its kind ever made in America. A number of articles secured at the Yamanaka and Matsuki sales have already been put on view. Some of these specimens date back to the Sung or Ming dynasties; others are quite modern. But all illustrate the possibilities of this metal in the hands of skillful designers who know how to use gold, silver or brass in connection with it.

In the center of the first case that has been arranged there is a large vase-like covered jar, dating back to the fifteenth century, and surmounted by a statuette of copper, inlaid with brass. This is a Chinese object, as are two small tea caddies, with portions in high relief; two large salvers of pewter, inlaid with brass, and a wonderful teapot, with handle of jade.

The Japanese pewter in another case shows everywhere strong affinity with the designs of other branches of Japanese art, and differentiates itself sharply in many essential particulars from the Chinese productions. Among other things shown are a bowl of the seventeenth century, with honeysuckle pattern, a very charming object in color and design; a large jar speckled with black—the quality that makes oriental pewter most valuable—and indicating by its ornamentation that it belongs to the class that was once made by special command of the court of Shogun for the emperor himself; a very striking bowl of pewter exterior, inlaid with panels of brass. The objects are now on view at the museum.

FOR RATTLESNAKE BITES.

A Simple Cure Which Is Said to Be Effective If Not Delayed Too Long.

Santiago F. Taylor writes from La Brecha, Sinaloa, Mexico, in regard to the Mexican cure for the bite of a rattlesnake. He says, according to the Los Angeles Times, it is effective if not delayed too late:

"The remedy is simply sulphur and beef suet, mixed in equal parts into an ointment. Take one ounce of flour of sulphur and one ounce of beef suet fried out the same as hog lard (in fact they call it beef lard) and cover the bite or wound with this mixture, enough to be one-eighth or one-fourth of an inch deep all over the spot bitten. Then apply heat until the ointment runs well. It is not necessary to apply heat enough to burn the person, only to melt the tallow and sulphur. The natives here use a hot stone or piece of broken crockery, or a macheta or a sheath knife heated hot in a hastily built fire. The Mayo Indians and Mexicans here assure me it is a sure cure."

Japanese Ship-Names.

In view of the periodic discussion about the appropriate naming of English warships, it is of interest to learn from Sir Edwin Arnold that Japan has christened her big battleships after great mountains and the smaller war vessels from some well-known natural features of the country.
